

Yipedeedoodah! My Bookouture Dream Come True (Originally written in 2017)

Today, was the day I've been waiting for for a very long time...

Those of you who have read previous posts will know that last year wasn't a great one. It was hugely emotional for many reasons, but through it all I was determined that the one thing that shouldn't suffer was my writing. And, in a way, it was the thing that kept me going, the thing I could throw all my energy into and hope it bore fruit. There was also another reason why it was so very important, you see, when my mum died I was finishing off the edits for Turn Towards The Sun and just missed out on being able to dedicate it to her. I was heartbroken she wouldn't be able to see it published, and so I vowed that the next book would be for her...

So, I carried on writing, and at the same time I also had an idea for another series of four books, similar to my Tales from Appleyard. What I wasn't sure about was who was going to publish them, if anyone. To cut a long story short (forgive the pun), I submitted my ideas for the series to Bookouture, together with the completed first draft of my new book. I will never forget the day the email arrived saying that they wanted to offer on all FIVE books! I still can't believe it's actually happened.

That was just a couple of weeks ago, and today...

Bookouture

22 August at 12:00 · 🌐

So excited to welcome women's fiction author, Emma Davies to the Bookouture family! Lucy's Book Club for the Lost and Found - a heart-warming story about one woman's mission to deliver happiness to all the members of her local reading group - will publish this November. More can be found in the blog post below: <http://www.bookouture.com/2017/08/22/bookouture-sign-womens-fiction-author-emma-davies/>

August 21, 2017 Archives - Bookouture
bookouture.com